

BOYS SCHOOL CAPTAIN SPEECH

Good Morning Teachers and Fellow Students of Orara High School.

My name is Lachlan Page, and I stand before you today with a mixture of excitement and nerves as I run for the position of school captain. To be honest, public speaking has never been my strongest skill. But standing here today, facing this fear, is the first step in my journey toward growth and leadership.

I believe that a true leader is someone who is willing to face their weaknesses and improve upon them. As Vince Lombardi once said, "Leaders are made, they are not born. They are made by hard effort, which is the price we must all pay to achieve our goal." I am not yet a leader, and I was never born to be one, but I am willing to do my best, to learn from my mistakes, and to grow alongside all of you.

My journey isn't just about becoming school captain; it's about pushing past my fears and proving to myself that I can handle responsibility, even when it's uncomfortable. I know that as school captain, I will have to speak in front of many people and be a voice for the student body. It's not easy, but it's something I am ready to work hard at, just like many of you are working hard at your own challenges.

Being a school captain is not just about leading from the front. It's about listening, supporting, and working with others to achieve common goals. I am committed to being approachable and understanding, and to making sure that everyone's voice is heard.

I will not promise to be perfect, but I will promise to be dedicated. I will listen, learn, and most importantly, I will lead by example. I hope that by facing my own fears and striving to improve, I can inspire others to do the same.

Thank you for your time and consideration. Together, we can make this school an even better place, and I am honoured to be considered for this role.
